Instructor Gets Supervisor Job

Mary Alice Wittenberg, instructor in the business education division of Harbor Junior College, has been promoted to Supervisor of Business Education, Division of Extension and Higher Education, Los Angeles City Schools, according to Raymond J. Casey, college director.

The new position includes supervision of seven junior colleges and 25 adult schools for business education classes. She will work with junior college division chairmen and adult school principals to provide staff advice and assistance in the interpretation, initiation and operation of the approved business education program.

A former teacher at Torrance Evening High School, Miss Wittenberg has been with Harbor JC since its opening in 1949. She also taught at Los Angeles Junior College of Business, Honolulu Business College, Washington High and Banning High. She is currently president of the California Business Education Assn., and vice president of the Western Business Education Assn.

PROSECUTOR FEES PAID BY COUNCIL

Payment to Attorney Boris S. Woolley of $450 for services to the city as prosecutor for the months of April, May, and June has been authorized by the City Council.

Woolley's statement to the city for the 3-month period indicated that he had conducted 14 jury trials and 34 court trials during that time in addition to his work in preparation of the cases.

Coordinating Council

The Torrance Coordinating Council meets tonight from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at the Torrance Personnel Agency, 1623 Gramercy.

Student From India Likes College Life

Unbothered by the comments and stares of the public as he sets about the business of getting an American education, Jagjit Singh, now completing his first year at El Camino College, reasons, "If Americans came to my country, the people would call them strange too."

Singh recalls a situation on a bus when a small boy, noting the bearded man with the lavender turban, nudged his mother and excitedly shouted, "Mom, he moves—Mom, he talks." In his thickly accented English, the student from India laughingly recalled, "The boy thought I was a statue on the seat and expected me to be carried away."

The native of Patialla, India, Singh came to the United States to study in an American college. Before returning to his homeland, he plans to obtain his masters degree in civil engineering at either the University of Southern California or at the University of California at Los Angeles.

... Says Camino Tops

is the eldest of eight sons of Dr. Jagdish Singh, director of health service in Pepsu and one of the top 20 surgeons in India.

In accordance with his religious conviction, Sikhism, a branch of Hinduism, and like his ancestors before him, Singh has never cut either his hair or his beard.

Graduating from the Bhupindra Narayana Khalsa high school, Patialla, after five years of study, Singh also completed five years of "middle," or elementary education.

Describes Campus
Describing the El Camino campus, Singh commented, "It's a wonderful piece of architecture." "I wish I had designed it," he said of the college library, which, to him, is the most impressive feature of the college.

Co-education is a new experience to Singh, who looks and acts older than his years. He considers American teenagers somewhat of a mystery.

Still rather shy in the company of girls, the Indian student explains that in his native land, "If a boy even talks with a girl in the street, it is told all over the village."

Unacquainted with American home life, Singh, who lives at 10924 Chadron St., Gardena, was under the impression that children were "kicked out of the house at 16 or 17 years of age" and were forced to support themselves.

"I talked to students who went to school during the day and worked at night and that's what I concluded," he admitted good-naturedly.
